COURSE DESCRIPTION:

Body Language and Nonverbal Communication

This specialized course provides an in-depth exploration of kinesics, the scientific study of body language. Participants will develop the ability to systematically analyze and interpret nonverbal cues, enhancing their ability to assess truthfulness and detect deception. Additionally, the course delves into the subtle ways individuals convey messages through body language, fostering a deeper understanding of human interactions. Designed for both corporate professionals and law enforcement personnel, this course equips participants with the skills necessary to improve communication, negotiation, interrogation, and situational awareness.

Instructor: Kevin Dean Radovich is a seasoned law enforcement professional with 19 years of experience in investigations, threat assessment, crisis management, and protective operations. Currently serving as a Criminal Investigator and Homeland Security Investigations (HSI) Task Force Officer with the Putnam County Sheriff's Office, he has led complex cases involving organized crime, human trafficking, narcotics, weapons smuggling, and fraud. A certified hostage and crisis negotiator, Drug Recognition Expert (DRE) Instructor, Certified Body Language Expert, and FAA Part 107 Drone Pilot, Radovich holds a Bachelor of Arts in Forensic Psychology from John Jay College of Criminal Justice.

WHO SHOULD ATTEND: This training is designed for law enforcement officers, first responders, and other public safety personnel seeking basic entry-level education in this topic. It is ideal for those new to the subject or looking to build foundational knowledge and practical skills to enhance their professional performance in high-stakes situations. No prior advanced experience is required.
