Overdose Investigation Unit

Fairfax County Police Department, VA

WEDNESDAY
NOVEMBER 18, 2026
10:00 AM – 12:00 PM

1800 Alexander Bell Dr.
Reston, VA

IN-PERSON & VIRTUAL

This joint discussion will examine emerging drug trends across the Washington/Baltimore HIDTA area of responsibility, drawing on insights from W/B HIDTA Drug Intelligence Officers. It will also explore the development of Fairfax County Police Department's Overdose Investigation Unit—its origins, operating practices, and lessons learned—as well as PLX, the W/B HIDTA-facilitated tool designed to strengthen communication, data analysis and investigative deconfliction.

FEATURED PRESENTER

KEVIN REYNOLDS

Overdose Investigation Unit

Kevin Reynolds has over 20 years of law enforcement experience that encompasses two departments (Manassas City Police Department and the Fairfax County Police Department). He has served in several units during his tenure in both departments, most notably as a Narcotics Detective with the Manassas City Police Department, in the Prince William County Narcotics Task Force (5 yrs), and a detective with the Overdose Investigations Unit with the Fairfax County Police Department (7 yrs). He has investigated numerous narcotics cases within the Northern Virginia area during his time as a detective in both Manassas City and Fairfax County which has led to numerous successful prosecutions at both the local and federal level.

The Overdose Investigations Unit was created in September of 2019 in effort to investigate and combat the rising level of fatal overdoses. This is a unique unit as a majority of police departments do not have a dedicated unit that investigates these types of cases. The unit began with 2 detectives and a full time analyst. Due to the high number of fatal overdoses early on, the unit went through several different levels of staffing but it currently sits at 3 full time detectives, one full time analyst and one supervisor. Over the years, the unit's investigations has led to successful prosecutions at both the federal and local level.
